installation which he had erected in his gardens in connection with the completion of the at Shoubra the first to be erected in Africa, installation, which is now not very far bff. and but it even placed Cairo ahead of London | we me therefore now content ourselves with and Paris themselves in this respect. Now, congratulation the Administration upon the after the lapse of many years, Cairo has success that has attended its enterprise and again secured for itself a place in the history upon the efficiency of its Signalling Departof electrical science, having established it ment, which, under the direction of its chief, record as the first town or station in the who is a specially trained expert in railway African continent to adopt electricity as an signalling, is very evidently accomp, shing very aid in the signalling of its railways. This valuable work. It is, we believe, an accepted was done on Saturday last, when Mr. James axiom of railway work in the present day that Punter, the chief of the Signalling Depart. the efficiency of the services rendered by any ment of the State Railways Administration, given line must to a very large extent be presided with his accustomed vim and tireless dependent upon the efficiency of its signalling energy at the inauguration of the first section this efficiency being, when all has been said of the new electric-pneumatic signalling instal- and done, the one really possible means of lation that has just been completed under increasing the working power of a line, since it his supervision.

was an unnecessary luxury, but we are satisfied standard in all respects.

that if the Commission could have had a really sufficient opportunity of study. ing the question they would, so far from even hinting at disapproval, have warmly commended the wise foresight the Administration have displayed in the adoption of this system of signalling for the Cairo station. How wise that foresight has been only time can fully show, but the truth is that it only needs a fair knowledge of the merits of the system, and of the circumstances which specially call for its application, to see that Cairo is a station which urgently required the adoption of this or some nearly equivalent system. It is of course quite outside of our scope to go into anything like technical details here, but we may say that, taking only one of the great advantages that the system offers, our readers can judge for themselves of its utility. The advantage to which we refer is the economy of space. Cairo station is, owing to the peculiar circumstances under which it has developed from its first primitive and very limited form, from the railway man's point of view, a most awkward station. The main through line connecting the Lower and Upper Egypt lines winds from the terminus platform to the riverside in a serpentine fashion that opposes great difficulty to effective signalling; and to make the growing need of room for locomotive sheds, carriage depots, goods platforms, sidings, repairing shops, and other necessary and absolutely indispensable conveniences of the service, it has had to branch off from this main line a number of sidings and line leading to these various sheds and depots, etc., both above and below the terminus platforms, every available inch of space being utilised in some form or other. The station has thus become a long, straggling, winding line with a number of branches apringing from it and leading to large areas of auxiliary lines, and thus in addition to the eighty or so passenger trains arriving or startlug from the terminus, there is throught ... the day and most of the night a restless bustling to and fro of engines and carriages and goods wagons passing from one part of the station to another in accordance with the exigencies of the service, and all this traffic has to be conducted under grave difficulties as to the signalling due to the irregular curving of the lines and the resulting impossibility of ADVERTISEMENTS engine-drivers seeing signals until quite close to them. This fact alone shows now necessary it is in this station to adopt the most efficient method of signalling attainable. But to this complexity a most important feature of the case to be added, is the scanty room that the London Correspondent's Offices - 36, New Broad main lines and auxiliary branches have. This is so small indeed as to be almost prohibitive Cairo Offices.—No. 1 Sharia Zervudachi, (opposite of any attempt to provide effective signalling by the use of the ordinary mechanical apparatus, for this demands a very large amount of space, the necessary connecting rods, etc., for the working of the points and signals at some spots needing almost as much ground space as the lines themselves. Here the advantage of the electric-pneumatic system speaks for itself, for by this system, instead of The Egyptian Gazette series of iron rods occupying at least as many feet of space in width as there are rods, the electric system employs only an air pipe and an electric cable carrying the necessary wires, R. SNELLING. all of which can be laid in an accessible and secure form in the space of a little more than what a couple of iron connecting rods would require. This fact alone quite justifies the adoption of this system for Cairo station. There are several other advantages that this ystem of signalling offers, but space forbids

"ANTAR" AT THE KHEDIVIAL

Such was the chill and draught, so wide-spread the coughing and searcing, that even the Ecdonic drauses, the absephord, the adjurations to the sun and desert, etc., could not hide the presence of winter—nor could we catch more than about two fiths of the play. It is the well-known Antar story, sentimentalized, for the real Antar was a great fighter, had a reasonably long married life, and died in battle. As a play the piece hange for from time to time, and does not quite "fit" here and there, in its various stages. So fre as we could hear them, there were some good lines and fine phrases, chirfly in the longer passages; indisages the author occasionally tripped, and even tumbled down now and again. M. To the Editor of the Egyptian Gazette

To THE EDITOR OF THE EDITIAN GAERTER,

Sir—On Saturday morning, the 50th December, in the Nebi Danielstreet at 9 a.m., I awa a waggon, like the "Arabish al Soda," stop. There were four employed of the Alexandria Municipality sitting upon it. Two of thirm descended, and one used a kind of whip as a lasso, with which, he laid hold of a large dog by the neck. Ancher employed then casplit the dog round the neck with a paint in on plants oxbeing like medical forcesprgave a most unmersiful requests on the large peak of the dog. Another employed tied the drg's bind legs. The man with the pliers then tried to lift the dog on to the top of the box of the cat, where the lift was, a height of about six feet, and in doing so the man let go of the dog, who fell with a heavy thed on to the paving stones. The same thing happened a second time, each attempt bringterowd. At the third attempt, hapsempled in petting the dog into their cart.

I wish to call your attention to the bretal, clomay, and creal way in which this affair was conducted, and to sak if the S.P.C.A.

CHRONIQUE JUDICIAIRE

COUR D'APPRI DE PARIS

LES PARTS DE FONDATEURS DU SUEZ

Mercredi la Cour d'appel de Paris a rende son arrêt dans le procès en requête civile in-tenté par les hoirs Negrelli à la Compagnie du Canal de Suez, en revendication de parts de fondateurs auquel leur auteur aurait eu droit, ament aux conclusions du ministère

Conformément aux conclusions du ministère public, la Coura rejeté la demande des hoirs Negrelli et les a condamnés aux dépens.

Cet arrêt mettra sans doute un terme à la série d'instances engagées tant ici qu'à Paris par de prétendus syant-droit contre la Con-moine qui a défendu avec un éclatant succès les intérêts de la Compagnie de Suez devant lestribunaux de la Réforme.
